

Why tell your dentist?

If you have headaches on a regular basis, it is a good idea to tell your dentist about them. But why your dentist? First of all, it is important to have this information as part of your medical records. Depending upon the type of headache, their frequency, and their severity, there are a variety of medical reasons that this can be important information for your dentist.

But most importantly, your headaches may be caused by an abnormal bite, and if so, your dentist can treat them more effectively than anyone else.

Headache is just one symptom that may be attributable to poor occlusion (or a bad bite). Other symptoms such as pain or noise in the jaw joint, facial pain, sensitive teeth, difficulty chewing, and neck pain may also be related to your occlusion, and should be discussed with your dentist.
